

Disclaimer:

If you have gotten this far, you are either a student of mine, a parent of a student of mine, or are pathetic enough that you have so little to do you are just nosing around here killing time. If that latter, I can't help you; you're on your own.

But...if you are a student or parent, please note: this web site is really just a toy. What you need to know about a class comes from the class, not this site. As an English teacher (and something of a luddite)(look it up), I'm a parchment and quill guy, not a web and mouse guy. I hope this site can prove helpful; but the fact that something is not here, that some part of the site is not up to date is...and read closely here - never an excuse. For anything.

What matters is what happens in class. What's important is what gets handed out (and in) in class. So, while I'll try to keep this here web site up to date, I probably won't eventually. Ask me in class if you have any questions, call me at home if you have any questions. But please understand that parchment and quill are always going to take precedence over web sites and mice. Mouses.
